MORNING CHORES.

The Early Job That Farmer Jedediah

Had on Hand. Although he was pretty glad to take in summer boarders and thus make capital of his small garden produce and his wife's excellent cooking, Jedediah Hubbard always made a great point of never letting his guests get in ahead of him in any way. "City folks that have been around a mite think they know it all f'um A to Izzard." he used to say. "They need somebody to take 'em down a peg or two once in awhile." One morning while he was chewing a long spear of grass near the wood yard he was surprised to see a newly arrived boarder, fully dressed, coming toward him. This propensity of "city fellers" to rise at sunup was quite irregular.

"Good morning!" exclaimed the new comer in a lusty tone "Morning!" responded the old man, as if uncertain just what to expect.

"Well, I suppose you have to get up early to see that the haycocks crow properly, don't you?" said the city man, with an airy, jocular familiarity which Jedediah was not slow to re-

"Well, no," he drawled, "not exactly that. I was just out untying some of the knots in the cord wood."

Too Fast For Him. At the University of Missouri is the first working school of journalism in the world. As practical laboratory work a daily paper with telegraph reports is issued. Walter Williams, its dean, tells of the vicissitudes he jeurnalists. A student was sent in haste to cover a railroad wreck at a town a few miles away. It was almost time for the daily to go to press, and still no word had been received from the young man on the assignment. In desperation Dean Williams telegraphed, asking why the story was not forthcoming. The reply was:

"Too much excitement. Wait till things quiet down."-Lippincott's.

Success. Success is only for those who are willing to stand by their standards. who are ready to endure the siege of misjudgment, who are prepared to face the fire of criticism and to accept defeat until they become vacchuated against it. Most men who gave up would have arrived if they had kept up.-Kaufman.

Just His Luck. A London bookmaker who was down on his luck was walking along the street feeling very disconsolate. He had a solitary shilling in his pocket. A notice in the window of a restaurant caught his eye: "Special-Roast Beef 12 to 1." "Not bad odds," he thought. Entering the shop, he said:

"DASH IT, I'VE LOST!"

"That roast beef, is it-is it on to-The girl behind the counter replied:

On the walls hung two badly painted portraits, the one of the then reigning monarch, Elizabeth, the other of King Richard III.

At supper the guest was waited on by Dorothy, the landlady's daughter, a comely lass of eighteen.

"Can you tell me, child," he said. "whence came the bedstead in the room I occupy?"

"Indeed, sir, I can. But first tell me why you ask.'

"It originally belonged to some great personage. That I know from the carving and the remains of gilding."

"It did, sir. It was near the end of the last century when one day the servants of King Richard III. came to this house preceding the king with his running wardrobe and set up that bedstead in the room they chose for his majesty's bedchamber. The king himself arrived later, slept in the bed and the next day was killed on Bosworth field. No one ever came to claim the furniture. My great-grandparents, who then kept this inn, took down the rich hangings. They are now stored in a chest in the attic, and the bedstead has remained in its place ever

The stranger remained at the Blue Boar for some time. He wrote much in his chamber and made excursions into the neighborhood, especially to Bosworth field. He and Dorothy became great friends, and he told her that he was writing a history. She confided to him that she had a lover, the son of a farmer whose family would not permit him to marry her because she had no dowry. The guest sympathized with her, but could do nothing to comfort her.

The young lover did not come to the inn, nor did the lovers meet clandestinely. But one evening while the A man's voice was saying

"I have at last quarreled with my father, Dorothy, about this matter. There is no hope for us. In a few days I shall sail for the new land of Virginia. If I return from there"-

"Don't talk thus, Joel. Virginia is far away and a wilderness. The fortunes said to be there are dreams." "Then, Dorothy, goodby, and goodby forever. I shall always"-

The voices were lost in the distance. The next morning while at breakfast the stranger said to the landlord:

"Mr. Porchester, there is in this house a property sufficient for a dowry for your daughter. It has been my good fortune to discover it, and, though it is not mine, I will not declare it till I have your promise that it shall be

Being the discoverer, he simply claimed it for one member of the family in whose possession it happened to be. At last the father yielded and with his wife signed a paper making over all the unknown property to his daughter Dorothy.

"Now come to my room," said the stranger when the matter had been settled. Whereupon the father, mother and daughter accompanied the guest upstairs and into his room.

"Take off the bedding." he said. pointing to the old four poster. They did as he directed. He then lifted a portion of the bottom, which was double, and revealed a heap of shining gold pieces.

His three companions stood looking at the treasure in astonishment. At last Mistress Porchester asked how he had come to discover it.

"A few nights ago," he said, "net being able to sleep, I tossed about the bed. After one of my thrashings I heard something drop on the floor, roll for a short distance and stop with a sound for all the world like a coin falling on its side. I got up, with flint and punk lit my candle, searched, and there on the floor under the bed found a gold piece of an old coinage. Knowing the history of the bed, it occurred to me that King Richard had used it to conceal a sum necessary for his personal expenses. In the morning I removed the mattress and found the

The stranger who had brought the treasure to light was commissioned to go to the father of Dorothy's lover and propose a marriage settlement. He was successful in his quest, and a betrothal was arranged. The stranger at the time of the wedding came from his home in London to witness the ceremony, and when he left the bride threw her arms around his neck.

COMPARISONS OF CLIMATE.

Some In Both Hemispheres Are Quite Similar.

When two regions on different hemispheres possess similar climates there is nearly always a similarity in their native vegetation, and it is a demontrated fact that many of the plants native to one of the regions find themrelves perfectly at home in the other. old man was sitting behind a clump of California conditions are markedly trees, studying some scraps of paper, | timilar to those of the Mediterranean he heard voices on the road near by. region, so that it is no surprise to find estimated that over 75 per cent of the forage on the California range lands is made up of Mediterranean immigrants, mostly annuals, such as wild oats, bur clover, alfilerilla, brome grasses, fescues, wild barleys and

The Great basin and the Columbia basin resemble California in one marked respect-namely, that the summers are dry and the winters wet. Indeed, the principal difference from California lies in the colder winters. The difference has not prevented the introduction and rapid spread of most of the European annuals now so conspicuous in California. It is really little short of amazing how rapidly and extensively some of these plants have occupied the range lands at the expense of the native vegetation. The conditions in Arizona are not very favorable to the plants that have found California conditions so congenial, with the exception of alfilerilla. Arabia of all old world regions is most like Arizona, and from there, if any-

The middle and south Atlantic states are similar to Japan and China in climate. It has long been recognized that all Japanese plants, especially ornamentals, thrive in this region perfectly. A number of them are so at home, indeed, that they have literally taken to the woods and behave as natives. Witness the Japanese honeysuckle, Japan clover, ailanthus, paulownia and the recently introduced Chinese violet. The cotton states evidently have much in common with India and southeastern Asia, whence we have obtained cowpeas, crab grass, Bermuda grass, velvet beans and many weeds, and to a less degree with Argentina, where rescue grass, carpet grass, paspalum grass and a number of common

THEREVER grain is grown continuously for a number of years the soil decreases in yielding power. If the practice is kept up the yields will finally become so low as to be unprofitable, and the land is said to be worn out. The fact is it is not worn out any more than a sickle is worn out when amount of treatment before they are

Fenald of the Massachu- continue productive for a much longer off the day of reckoning, but after the dollars to the pockets of the fertilizer manufacturer be will find that even

Keeping the Soil Productive.

There are three factors on which the productivity of the soil primarily depends-the amount of available mineral plant food elements which it contains, its physical condition and the amount of moisture it will hold. Ni trogen, one of the three most important themical elements in the soil, can be btained from the air in unlimited uantities by the use of legumes, such as clover and alfaifa. The other two, phosphorus and potassium, are present in most soils in fairly large quantities, although much of the supply is in unavailable form. Good tillage and well planned rotations do much to make these elements available. When the total supply becomes low it can be renewed by the application of fertilizers. This is all, however, that fertilizers will do. They will not improve the physical condition of the soil nor increase its moisture holding

The use of liberal amounts of clover in the rotation will add to the humus supply of the soil and so increase its moisture holding capacity. Humus acts like a sponge, forming a store house for water that would otherwise be wasted. Humus also improves the physical condition of the soil, making it lighter and mellower. Take a pan ful of clay and a panful of rich black surface soil, wet them thoroughly and place them in the sun. When the clay is dry it will be baked almost as hard as a brick, while a little stirring will make the black dirt as mellow as ever. This difference in the two soils is due solely to humus.

The humus supply cannot be maintained by the use of clover unless a crop is plowed under at frequent intervals. It takes considerable time for this clover to rot enough to form humus, and the turning under of so large an amount of green matter at once is liable to make the land "sour." This condition can be corrected by the use of lime, but this means trouble and expense.

The Value of Manure.

The French Coach Horse.

This breed originated in France, being the product of a cross between the English thoroughbred and native mares of France that have considerable oriental blood in their veins. The typical horse of this breed stands sixteen hands high or over, weighs 1.200 to 1,400 pounds and is in all essentials a coach or carriage horse. He is more rangy in type than the hackney, an upstanding, graceful, free moving,

This table shows at a glance the great economy, considered from a fertility standpoint, of marketing grain in the form of live stock. Adding fertilizing materials to the soil, however, is only one of the ways in which manure is beneficial. It helps to break down the unavailable minerals. It adds humus, and this is of a kind that mixes readily with the soil. Thus the physical condition and water holding capacity of the soil are improved even more than where clover is used. Instead of plowing under clover it can be fed. The resulting manure will do the soil almost as much good as the clover would if turned under. Thus both the feeding and fertilizing values are obtained from it. By using a regular rotation with clover and feeding all the rough feed and most of the grain on the farm the soil can be brought

In an experiment at the Ohio experiment station where manure was applied every three years to a rotation of corn, wheat and clover at the rate of eight tons to the acre the average increase in yield was 14.7 bushels of corn, 8.36 bushels of wheat and 686 pounds of clover. The value of the increased yields due to the eight tons of manure was $17.32, or $2.17 per ton for the manure. This was for manure that was obtained in the open yard. Manure that had been tramped down in sheds where it was under shelter had a value of $2.95 per ton in increased crop yields.

The results obtained on a little run-This farm was so badly exhausted that it would produce scarcely anything. Dairying was introduced and a few years of such treatment and without the addition of any commercial fertilizers whatever the productivity of the farm was so greatly in creased that an annual revenue of $200

Applying Manure.

The best results are obtained, how ever, when manure is applied fre quently and in comparatively small amounts. For the ordinary field crops an application of eight tons to the acre is sufficient at one time. To get the required amount on each acre and to get it applied evenly a spreader is a necessity. Manure spread evenly over the ground is much more. effective than that thrown about in

FIG. VI .- MANURE PILES IN OPEN YARD. large chunks, as is usually done, with a pitchfork. Still worse is the practice of dropping the manure in piles. leaving it nearly all winter and then toward spring scattering it about with a fork. In addition to spreading the manure more evenly, the spreader saves work enough to warrant any one who has much stock in buying

The spreader should be kept in use practically the year round. Manure left in the open yard for six months loses nearly half its fertilizing value. Manure kept in sheds does not lose in value nearly so rapidly. A practice that is sometimes followed on dairy farms is to have a shed in connection with the barn, keeping the cows in this shed most of the time, turning them into the barn only long enough to be is to keep live stock and apply the this is to have a small shed over the manure to the land.
